NOTE: As of November 2015 the FAA has begun removing marketing names from the Civil Model Designation column. When determining the appropriate type rating of an aircraft, compare the aircraft model from Block 2 of the Airworthiness Certificate to the Civil Model Designation column below. The column titled Current Type Rating Designation will show the appropriate type rating for this aircraft.

1. As of November 2015 the FAA has begun removing marketing names from the Civil Model Designation column. When determining the appropriate type rating of an aircraft, compare the aircraft model from Block 2 of the Airworthiness Certificate to the Civil Model Designation column below. The column titled Current Type Rating Designation will show the appropriate type rating for this aircraft.

NOTES:

Any helicopter modified by a Supplemental Type Certificate that changes the helicopter limitation from Visual Flight Rules to Instrument Flight Rules constitutes a major change in the configuration of the original Type Certificate holder's model requiring an Aircraft Evaluation Division Flight Standardization Board to determine the type rating, training, and checking requirement prior to the modified helicopter entering into operational service.

* These are civil aircraft listed on a Type Certificate Data Sheet (TCDS) with the same model designation as the military aircraft. Care should be taken to differentiate between the civil model and military model.

 The TCDS or Flight Standardization Board (FSB) report should be referenced to determine which serial numbers of military aircraft are eligible to be converted to a civil model aircraft or issued this type rating based on 14 CFR § 61.73(e).
